

A White Christmas in Dublin: Memories of the Winter of 2010

In the year 2010, Dublin in Ireland had far more snow than usual. The snow came in February, late November/early December, and from the 19th of December onwards. It was difficult for Irish people to cope, as they were not used to snow. When the snow started on the 19th of December, people realised that Dublin was likely to have its first White Christmas in a very long time. What would that be like? Would they manage to travel, to buy food and presents, and to meet up with family and friends? This book is about the snows of 2010, with particular emphasis on our White Christmas.
