Not illustrated. 1866 edition. Excerpt: ...will insure him a flattering reception. I should like to have accompanied him. He goes first to Canada I understand Mr. Lowell was very anxious to induce Faraday to come over and lecture on Chemistry. But poor Faraday, like several of our best men, has overworked himself, and is obliged to lay by altogether There is a hauteur or reserve about Mr. Lyell to strangers, that prevents his being so popular among our society as he deserves to be. I believe him to have an excellent heart, and he is very kind and affectionate, when his better feelings are called upon. I have had some reason to complain on points relating to authorship, but that perhaps is mere weakness of human nature. I am very much attached to him. I have only to regret that he has not that warmth of feeling which I hoped to find in him, and which would have rendered him an invaluable friend to me Perhaps we Southrons are of more excitable stuff than the Northerners. TO DR. MANTEIX. New Haven, September 25, 1841. Our house is a mile and a half from the depot, and the whole distance is through the streets of the town. By and by Mr. Lyell says,--after riding a mile,--are you carrying us to the Tontine? No, to another house where, although your entertainment may not be as luxurious, your welcome will be quite as hearty! Mrs. Silliman and my daughter present their respects to Mrs. Lyell, and invite her, as I do her husband also, to the hospitality of our house. Your chamber is ready, and we shall make the best use of our time in being together; we will, if you please, banish all reserve, and be acquainted at once. They took us at our word, and we were soon at my door, where Mrs. Lyell met a warm
